Transitional housing programs generally allow stays between 90 days and 24 months, usually as an extended mid-point between emergency shelter and permanent housing. Transitional housing programs entail case management and/or other supportive services designed to help clients address the causes of their homelessness and gain the stability necessary to obtain permanent housing. Like shelters, transitional housing programs are offered in a range of environments, from facility-based peer-group settings to scattered individual apartments or single-family homes. Most transitional housing programs require clients pay 30% of their monthly income for rent in order to facilitate readiness for permanent housing.
